

Dear Participant,

Thank you for joining the EMES Initiative's second Vaccination Education for Women Event. The EMES Initiative's mission is to advance culturally sensitive healthcare education for the frum community. We are so pleased you have joined us tonight.

We held our first health fair in June to give women the opportunity to ask questions about vaccine safety and side effects, and to speak with healthcare providers about their concerns. The feedback was overwhelmingly positive. In anticipation of the new school year and confusion over the new vaccination law, we thought it would be helpful to repeat this event in Williamsburg.

Please take advantage of the many physicians, nurses, nurse practitioners, physician's assistants and other vaccine experts who have gathered here tonight. Ask your questions and collect as many handouts of the data as you can.

We do ask, however, that all questions and conversations be handled respectfully. Everyone is here as a volunteer with the goal of helping women make the best healthcare decisions they can. We understand that fears about vaccine safety often cause conversations to be emotional and difficult. We are here to help, and we all want the same for our children and our community: healthy families.

Sincerely,

The EMES Initiative's Vaccine Task Force
